Wedded Lust

He thrust slowly, oh-so-slowly, but with a pace to match the quickening pulse. Tight. Tightening. Slow, but speeding up. Controlled breathing, to avoid unwanted attention. Faster. Tighter. Breath louder, but still as silent as possible. Pleasure in every stroke, nearly peaking now.

Beside him, his wife stirred. His hand stopped.

At the first hint of a gentle snore, he began to thrust again.

About The Author

Gary Jordan started sharing his adult writing in 2001 with First Impressions, an adult science fiction story. He says that writing helps him deal with the loneliness of being a widower by incorporating the best aspects of a 25-year marriage into fiction. A confirmed chocoholic, he has a tendency to incorporate that taste into his stories as well. It generally results in a lighter, sweeter story -- or so he claims.

About This Title

Wedded Lust is an entry in the First Annual Bradley Stoke Flash Stroke Festival

Here were the rules (the important ones, at any rate):

1. The story must be a stroke story--whatever that means to you.
2. The story must fit entirely on a computer screen. For the purposes of this festival, the maximum number of lines (including title and blank lines) is 18, and the maximum number of characters in a line (including spaces) is 70. Text only, please. (I know. I know. 18X70 would overflow a handheld.)
3. What is flash? What is stroke? What is flash stroke?

Flash is very short short story. It may be poetic, but it is fiction, not poetry, not song, not mattress tags or shopping lists or recipes for eggplant parmesan. Stroke is fiction that is intended to sexually arouse the reader. Successful stroke fiction inspires masturbation and provokes orgasm. So flash stroke is a very short short story designed to sexually arouse its readers. Those are my opinions, anyway.
